Abstract. The results of a two-year herpetological field survey inside a small area of the Roman Campaign north east of the Rome city district are reported. Notwithstanding the extremely small size and its close proximity to extensive urbanized district, the area supports interesting populations of Amphibians (four species) and Reptiles (seven species). Three species, Bufo bufo, Podarcis siculus and Chalcides chalcides, are regularly monitored while the extreme abundance of the last species is remarkable. From the conservational viewpoint, the presence of Bufotes balearicus is noticeable.
